Birds, Bees and Native Plants – Ralph Buckles

Join us for fellowship, good food, and a timely talk on how native plants (trees, bushes and flowers) provide a habitat that can preserve the lives of various types of birds and pollinators (especially Honey Bees). The use of chemical free habitats will not only preserve the current species of birds and bees, but will allow the numbers of both birds and bees to grow. Easy to grow specialty plants will be discussed. Plants like kitchen herbs, hedges and blooming trees will be discussed and how they can help both birds and bees. Honey tasting of some different types of honey will be part of the program. Ralph is a member of the Lancaster County Beekeeper Society. He is pursuing bee production and associated honey, without chemicals. He serves as a Senior Estimator and/or Project Controls Analyst for various national based companies over the last 30 years. Construction specialties include the custom redevelopment and recycle of distressed properties, also known as Brownfields Development.
